Dude (or dudes) who have been working hard in this game always tinker with it and make changes, but I wanted to share my thoughts on this massive 3D open pokémon adventure world. Bridging the gap while playing is not as story-driven as I had hoped. It is my understanding that ultimately the goal of the story is supposed to be the bridge between the original games, red, blue and yellow and then gold, silver, and crystals. I can make a mistake with that, but looking at the different pokémons in the game that definitely seems like the timeframe that Pokémon generation is trying to catch up with and I'm cool with it. 3D pokemon! For a fan game, I think the visuals of the Pokémon generation are very good. The game I feel has a kind of GameCube-type era feel to provide overall visual. Getting them all game like the open world 3D Pokémon adventure is something that many fans have been wanting for years. The gameplay is very easy to reach grips with and walk around and get into a lot of fun battles. I really like the way you actually control Pokémon and it makes you invest a more way into the fight. A really good touch is the way you can record Pokémon when they faint just like what's happening on the TV show. I don't want to say that the gameplay is incredibly deep or anything like that, but if you like Pokémon I'm sure you want to have a lot of fun with this. As this is a fan game, I notice a few technical hiccups, usually the result of crashing my game. However, it is not frequent enough to become a major issue. I was very impressed with pokémon generations and I was hoping that the folks would keep behind playing in it. They always add up on the new Pokémon and build notifications for future updates, so I'm very excited to see what comes out of this. I just hope they keep everything ground and try to do too much as I think that can actually hurt the game in the long run. If you love Pokémon, you really need to check this out. 8/10 Pros: Many early generation Pokémon to play by capturing Pokémon is a fun war very enjoyable control of various cool Pokémon is a totally big negative world: without ending in sight of a few technical issues here and there is the best version of counter strike ever San Andreas is to live in gta iv pubg version for pc playing this amazing battle royale on your computer call mobile duty (GameLoop) mobile cod game from your spectacular shooter team
